My mother was one of the silliest people one could ever meet. She loved to press people's buttons to make them smile, speak unapologetically, and display a level of confidence that most couldn't match. She loved to spend time watching reality tv and scary movies, the only person I know who can fall asleep to a movie like The Conjuring. She also loved to just hang out in her chair, play her games and color her pictures to help her relax. My mother was an extremely family/friend oriented individual who would give the t-shirt off of her back to help someone. She loved to spend time with family and always made sure to keep the love flowing through the family, at all costs. She was a dedicated employee who spent an absurd amount of time working and more than she would like me to confess lol. Getting her toes done and eating out with whoever wanted to tag along was also something she loved to do, especially if it was me (daughter), nieces, and/or nephews. Her favorite football team was the Cowboys, even though she never took the time to actually watch the games. She loved to remind people that she was that she was cute lol. Every single day, she was unapologetically herself and no one could ever take that from her. To know my mother was to love her because all her actions derived from the heart and was a rock to anyone who needed it. She will be missed more than words could truly convey across.
